was burned and battered, but the hands were still on and pointed to the minutes. The body was lifted into the pit to receive them, still covered with dirt. The crowd watched breathlessly, the face was uncovered. "Murphy! Poor old Jim!" cried a fireman who recognized the face instantly, and the identification was made. The search for the remains of the morgue, and the work went on with redoubled vigor, seeking for the remains of the victims. Chief Parrington and his men, searched the ruins for valuables and other articles. Work of Destruction.
 Hopes were used, but only a small portion of the dangerous timbers were removed. Then a stream of water was turned on the shabby work, but it had little effect. The work was jammed down so hard on the foundations below it and they in turn were firmly held in place by projecting beams, that it they were built that way they would not be more solid. Yet a slight movement of the brickwork might cause all to fall and kill the men below. Finally, after several hours work the work of removing timbers was given up until the work could be devised and the men returned to their labor on the debris. Everything had been removed about ten feet from the center of the building was an immense pile of broken timber, lath, brick, mortar and plaster that ran up to the first story. Portions were in a mass and it is thought that a majority of the seventeen missing ones are underneath it. The bodies of General Adams and Peter Gurney are supposed to rest here.
 Five New Names.
 The seven new names which were added to the list of missing yesterday were: A. M. Monroe, whose residence is Denver, and a party of six consisting of Mrs. L. A.

INSANE ASYLUM HORRORS

Testimony in the Dunning Investigation.

BATTLE BETWEEN MANIACS
 Resident Physician, the Principal Witness.

Dr. McGrew in His Sworn Evidence States that on One Occasion Two Lunatics Were Allowed to Tear the Flesh Out of Each Other's Faces, and One of Them Ate His Own Flesh—The Guard Did Not Lift His Hand to Prevent the Fight—President Healy Astonished by the Shocking Evidence of the Doctor.

At this moment a portion of the clock gave way and the noise of the falling matter sent the crowd in a mad rush for the exit. The very thousand words of testimony were taken at the first sitting.

DR. MCGREW.

At this moment a portion of the clock gave way and the noise of the falling matter sent the crowd in a mad rush for the exit. The very thousand words of testimony were taken at the first sitting. Toward the end of the day's sitting came a horrible story that in detail was a large part of the story of the Dunning insane asylum. It was told by Dr. McGrew, resident physician of Dunning insane asylum. It concerned a battle between two mad men who had fought in the corridor of ward No. 2, while Anderson, secretary to the murder of Puck, was on watch. These two patients quarreled over some silly, childish difference. They came to blows. They tore at each other's faces and pulled out the hair of each other. Anderson looked on. One of them, in the frenzy of a maniac, set his teeth into the face of the other. He bit off his nose and spat it out on the stone floor of the corridor. The maniac with whom this patient was battling sprang away from the death grip, fell bleeding and screaming to the floor, saw the flesh torn from his own face, stuffed it into his mouth and chewed his eye out to pulp and swallowed it. He said that it would make it grow on again, and Anderson looked on. This was the sworn testimony of Dr. McGrew.

While it was being given one of the commissioners turned pale and sickened. Judge Adams, one of the committee, covered her face with her hands and clutched at the arm of her chair. McGrew made the story more effective by the quiet way he told it. So far as his manner was concerned, it was not an unusual occurrence at Dunning. Resurrection of the Boiler.
 A little later a section of the burst boiler was found embedded in the masonry. It was so hot that it could not be removed. The force of the explosion must have been terrific. The fire which had been smoldering since Sunday night seemed to be effectually quenched. The boiler was so hot that it could not be removed. The force of the explosion must have been terrific. Men Wanted in Los Animas County Fight the Officers Pursuing Them Near Clayton, N. M.

CLAYTON, N. M., Aug. 20.—Constable Brophy of Clayton, received a telegram yesterday morning from the sheriff of Los Animas county, Colo., to look out for two men by the name of Lawrence and Blake, who were wanted for horse stealing. Late yesterday evening two young men rode into town and stopped in front of the Clayton drug store. One entered the store and the other remained outside and held the horses. The one entering the store made some small purchases and returned to his horse.

When Constable Brophy approached them and questioned them as to who they were and where they were going, they avoided such questions, mounted their horses and rode out of town. Lawless was sent to locate their camp. He followed them to the Apache canon, about three miles from Clayton, where they had their camp, and there were two other men in waiting.
